

Amaranthia Sepia is a Buddhist, invisible disabilities activist, graphic artist & character designer of African-American and Barbadian descent. Her mediums are focused on ink and digital art. She is a self-taught art director focusing on minority-inclusive, unconventional activist artworks. Sepia was previously an art coordinator for the grassroots collective ARTivism Initiative and was an artist and collaborator for LA non-profit The Painted Brain for their disability art show, "Discovering a Place for Us." Living with C-PTSD, panic disorder, and agoraphobia, she highlights unconventional experiences through art. Amaranthia, along with her Mom, Claire, co-founded Sista Creatives Rising, helping & funding creative marginalized women and marginalized genders.

When Sepia faced racism due to bullying in American public schools after returning from Japan, she found peace by making artwork based upon memories of Tokyo, teaching her the healing power of art. Bullying worsened her health, forcing her to enter online school. Since then, she's developed several activist art shows and provides creatives tools for utilizing their creativity to gain confidence to make a difference in their communities.
